GUIDE TO FAMILY SUCCESSION PLANNING

One of the most challenging experiences facing any business leader

Family succession planning is a journey that should commence the day you start your business, but often only commences with a trigger – in other words, something that has initiated the decision to start the succession process. It may be one of the most challenging experiences facing any business leader, especially an entrepreneurial business person who has built a family business from scratch, so it is crucial to get right.

For a family business, transition is a once-in-a-lifetime decision. Perhaps no challenge has as much potential to exacerbate the special stresses – or, conversely, highlight the special advantages – of operating a family business.

PROSPERITY FOR GENERATIONS TO COME

A good succession plan can be the first step in maintaining the strength of an enterprise and the family's prosperity for generations to come. Discussing how a family business should continue beyond the career, or even the life, of the founder can be difficult, as it often crosses business and personal spheres. Issues around succession planning make up four of the top ten worries keeping family business owners awake at night, according to research from Close Brothers Asset Management (CBAM), conducted by Family Business United.

Families who are in business must give their attention to the organisational needs of not only their business but also that of their family and, most importantly, those areas where business and family intersect. Often family and business are so closely interwoven that it is almost impossible for the family to come together without bringing the business with them. This is not always a good thing, and family meetings are not necessarily the ideal setting to consider and discuss business.

EVEN HARDER PROCESS

The challenges faced by the second and third generations are substantially different from that faced by the first generation. Also, given that the first generation is often highly entrepreneurial, they often tend to overlook succession planning until the last moment. This makes the process even harder.

A survey of family businesses found that management succession planning was a worry for 39% of business owners, while 35% cited engaging and developing the next generation as a concern. Ownership succession and developing responsible future owners was stated as a worry by more than a third (34%) of business owners. The same number also highlighted identifying and maintaining family values as an ongoing concern.

PLANNING FOR LATER LIFE

The day-to-day running of the business came in as the top worry for family business owners, with 40% saying that continuing to develop and remain a profitable business was a key concern. Personal finances also stood out, with worries about planning for later life highlighted by 38% of owners.

Outside of family businesses' immediate control, four in ten (39%) business owners said red tape, regulation and legislation was a worry. Family businesses employ almost 12 million people[1] and turn over an estimated £1.3 trillion each year, which is over a third of the turnover of the private sector[2].

FAMILY OWNED SMALL BUSINESSES

UK SMEs face a multitude of challenges, and family owned small businesses can have an especially hard time navigating regulation and adapting to changing policy while remaining loyal to their unique set of family values. Beyond that, all this must be done while running a profitable business.

Succession planning is naturally a significant concern for family businesses and requires careful consideration. Not only must owners consider developing their replacement and ensure family values are adhered to, but they must also plan for their own retirement. Taking advice early and developing a personal financial plan is crucial to alleviating anxiety and meeting long-term goals.
